GOLF GAME TIPS

Tip 1: Putting Mistakes.

Becoming a great putter isn't easy. It takes focus, determination, and hours of hard work on the practice green. However, by avoiding the most common mistakes that amateur golfers make on the dance floor you can make some big steps forward without too much effort.

Here are the top 4 putting mistakes to avoid...

Not having a pre-shot routine. It doesn't need to be anything fancy, you've got to have a pre-shot routine. For mine I simply stand behind the ball to pick my line, walk up to the ball and make 2-3 practice swings looking at the hole, address the ball with my right hand on my putter grip first then my left, settle into place, take one last look at the hole, and then make my stroke - every single time.

You're not relaxed. Tension is one of the biggest enemies of great putts. If any part of your body (especially your hands and arms) is clenched too tightly you're going to have a hard time stroking the ball consistently. To loosen up let your arms drop to your sides and go dead - then grip your putter and try to feel the weight of the club head.

You're not taking dead aim. It's amazing how many golfers I see who just don't pay enough attention to where they are aiming on the putting green. Take the time to line up your putt from behind the ball and visualize how it will roll into the hole. Then use the alignment aids on your putter to help you square your club face up to the target, and don't forget to align your feet and shoulders as well.

You're not practicing properly. Many golfers I see on the practicing green are just aimlessly whacking a few balls from one hole to another without much thought to it. If you really want to improve your putting you've got to focus on actually making putts, and that means focusing on those pesky 3-4 footers first.

If you can focus on avoiding these common putting mistakes you'll find yourself rolling more birdie and par putts into the bottom of the cup, and improving your scores!

Tip 2: By the way, are you consistently one of the shortest hitters in your group every round of golf you play?

Do you struggle to reach long par 4's in two and need to use a lot of hybrids and 3-woods for your approach shots?

If either of these sound like you it's likely you find it difficult to create lag in the golf swing and are desperate for that extra bit of power to help make the game easier...

Well you're not alone, most golfers I see struggle for distance and as a result find golf a lot more difficult than it needs to be.

Believe me, there is a big difference to hitting an 8-iron into a par 4 than a hybrid or 3-wood and it makes it much easier shoot a lower score.

Below are the 6 main reasons for loss of lag in your golf swing.

1. Casting
2. Incomplete shoulder turn
3. Small swing arc
4. Incorrect weight shift
5. Strong grip pressure
6. Dominant right side

The good news is it's not as difficult as you might think to hit longer golf shots...
